From Vandenberg, California to Kwajalein Atoll, Kaua'i to Jeju, South Korea, Okinawa to the UK, the U.S. global network of military bases and space-based weapons systems seeks to attain "full-spectrum dominance" over the planet. But grassroots movements are resisting through dynamic local-global networks of solidarity.

An international panel of activists and scholars will discuss the local, regional and global ramifications of the U.S. missile defense programs and expanding U.S. militarism in the Asia-Pacific region, resistance against U.S. military bases in Hawai'i, Okinawa, Korea and the UK and the far-reaching implications of the militarization of space.
